References GTA-SA-Deck Modifier Replaced: Mod list: Regulation of neurotransmitter release at vertebrate neuromuscular junctions. Vertebrate neuromuscular junctions (NMJs) are synapses formed by the axons of motor neurons and skeletal muscle fibers. At these synapses, nerve-released transmitter (acetylcholine in vertebrates) triggers activation of the acetylcholine receptor (AChR) channel. Signals transmitted through this channel are subsequently translated into membrane voltage changes, causing muscle contraction. Modulation of synaptic transmission at the NMJ is a complex process involving both presynaptic and postsynaptic components. A number of proteins have been identified as being involved in presynaptic regulation of synaptic transmission. These include proteins involved in neurotransmitter synthesis, synaptic vesicle membrane cycling, and vesicle exocytosis. They also include proteins involved in postsynaptic modulation of neurotransmission. Among these proteins are metabotropic (G-protein coupled) and ionotropic receptors and modulators that target the AChR and voltage-gated Ca²⁺ channels. Our understanding of the role and mechanism of action of these proteins and signaling pathways has increased significantly during the past few years. This review focuses on our current knowledge of these mechanisms in vertebrate systems. Hotel Village New York - Midtown Manhattan Group of friends stayed here in July for three nights while traveling to Williamsburg and Manhattan. Our suite was large and bright. The room was clean and the staff was extremely helpful. The room was
