Grozdana Olujić Prepricano Rapidshare. Significance of beta-2 adrenergic receptor polymorphism for the pathophysiology of COPD. The beta-2 adrenergic receptor (beta2-AR) regulates airway obstruction and lung inflammation in acute and chronic inflammation. Genetic studies identified a functional polymorphism Arg16Gly (Arg16Gly, R16G) in the beta2-AR gene. We hypothesized that the G16 variant increases airway obstruction and inflammation in COPD. First, we performed bronchoprovocation tests in 92 patients with COPD and 145 healthy subjects to identify the bronchoprotective effect of agonists. In 16 additional patients with COPD, the effect of a beta2-AR agonist (albuterol) or an antagonist (ICI 118,551) was investigated on the bronchoprotective effect of bradykinin, a model of cholinergic reflex-mediated bronchial obstruction. The G16 variant was associated with increased bronchoconstriction to albuterol ($P = 0.01$). There was a significant association between
