

. U.S. Pat. No. 4,213,393 also discloses the use of die cast slugs in lieu of welded slugs. U.S. Pat. No. 3,572,741 discloses the use of slugs as ammunition components. Also U.S. Pat. No. 3,540,803 discloses the use of a slug of metal that is softer than the other parts of the cartridge to be more readily deformable than the other components. U.S. Pat. No. 4,196,445 discloses the use of an outer layer of plastic material on the slug to prevent the slug from tearing the cartridge case when impacting the body of the target at a high velocity. The above described and other prior art ammunition cartridges use frangible slugs or caseless ammunition cartridges to reduce the risk of fragmenting projectiles and death or wounding to the user. The frangible projectiles are more expensive and more complicated than those which are not frangible. Such ammunition cartridges are described in U.S. Pat. Nos. 3,658,095; 4,213,393; 3,541,880; 3,540,803; 4,196,445; 4,200,244; and 4,196,444, and in U.S. Pat. No. 4,615,480. Frangible ammunition and frangible projectiles are also described in U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,105,016 and 4,285,054. U.S. Pat. No. 4,308,039 discloses a caseless ammunition cartridge wherein the cartridge case is formed as a flexible bag filled with loose powder and projectiles. U.S. Pat. Nos. 3,654,439; 3,941,036 and 3,941,084 disclose caseless ammunition cartridges using an exploding foil projectile. These cartridges use a projectile in which a thin sheet of foil is secured between two film ends. An igniting agent is positioned adjacent to the foil. Upon firing, the igniting agent is ignited by the high temperature of the cartridge case. The projectile is propelled by a chemical reaction between the igniting agent and the gases created upon firing of the cartridge. A powder actuated projectile is described in U.S. Pat. No. 2,995,444. U.S. Pat. No. 3,685,110 discloses a powder actuated projectile. The projectile includes a metal case with a cavity
