Widget Engine Multi Currency Converter Description: A high-profile counterterrorism prosecutor who was to become the U.S. attorney for the Eastern District of New York under President Barack Obama was secretly working as an FBI informant, the New York Times reported on Tuesday, detailing the intelligence operation that began shortly after the Sept. 11 attacks. Under a joint task force with the FBI, the young attorney, then in her 30s, became a confidential informant to track several suspected Islamic extremists who were under surveillance by the FBI and CIA, according to two officials who told the Times. "Before 9/11, the FBI and CIA did not have an office devoted exclusively to Muslim issues," William J. Bratton, a former NYPD commissioner and now the superintendent of the Boston police, said in a statement. "It was a highly effective and worthwhile operation by an FBI Special Agent." Under Bratton, the Boston police worked with the FBI's Joint Terrorism Task Force to investigate a growing domestic Muslim population. "It was clear from the very beginning of the program that law enforcement should work with the U.S. attorney's office to monitor and tackle this threat," the task force's former leader, F.B.I. Assistant Director James J. Kallstrom, told the Times. Federal investigators had been monitoring a mosque in New York's Staten Island since the mid-1990s after determining that Islamic militants with links to Al Qaeda were beginning to set up shop. "We were not looking for information on whether any of these people were going to commit a crime," Kallstrom said. "We were looking for what we call aspirational crimes." The informant began in 2002 at the request of Robert M. Morgenthau, then the Manhattan district attorney and a member of the Joint Terrorist Task Force. "My decision to do what I did was because I wanted to make New York a safer place," Morgenthau told the Times. The New York U.S. attorney is now a
