For a while, I only did this and didn't look into any other options. However, recently I decided to make a last effort and go through options such as Flickr, KODI, and VLC. The first one I tried was Flickr. The basic idea of this application is to be able to extract media files from your PC and then upload them to Flickr for easy viewing. There are no options to capture content from your library, save that with multiple formats, but quality is decent. What's more is that the Flickr application's interface is clean and simple, as shown in the screenshots. I didn't find a way to extract audio files and save them as well, and I found the results were not up to standards. KODI As far as I can tell, KODI is more of an all-in-one player, but I didn't try the service. VLC I'm just wondering if this is a good idea or not. I'm thinking of this because I used to watch a lot of videos in VLC before, but as time passed by, I found that my computer was getting sluggish and VLC itself was taking longer to load. It's been a while since I used VLC, but I never bothered to check if

Even if they want to, there are practical reasons why they can't and if they do, they'll most likely move. Comment from Teandynamic 2014-06-24T15:33:11Z I'm pretty sure everyone has lived in a community where they've had to share. I've lived in several, and I just didn't feel the same about my neighbors as I do now. It's so much easier to be able to walk into a room and not have to worry about what someone has in their hand, and it helps to be able to easily hang out with the people in your community. Comment from phisstech 2014-07-17T15:36:32Z Just make sure you do not invite strangers into your house without first figuring out if it is safe for you to do so. Comment from phisstech 2014-07-17T15:36:36Z Just make sure you do not invite strangers into your house without first figuring out if it is safe for you to do so. Comment from jimmy 2014-08-14T16:06:15Z Come on, even if your parents buy you a house, there are going to be people who will be "stalking" you and trying to be friends with you in your new place. Comment from phisstech 2014-08-14T16:21:08Z While there are obviously going to be people who will try to befriend you and generally do everything they can to get you to like them, there are also going to be people who will be genuinely interested in the fact that you're moving. The people who are actually going to be genuinely interested in you are worth having around, so don't worry too much. Comment from jimmy 2014-08-14T16:28:40Z If you're buying a house, though, don't invite your family members over before you're sure it's safe for them to be over
