Q: Undefined variable: error_message I am trying to catch a $_SESSION error. However, i get the following error message: Undefined variable: error_message It is logged in my console output. What am i doing wrong here? I've checked the other questions concerning the same issue but without any success. It would be awesome if someone could point me in the right direction. Thanks a lot in advance! Error trace: A: You should use isset() with your session variable before assigning a value: session_start();

if(!isset($_SESSION['your_session_variable'])) { $_SESSION['your_session_variable'] = ""; }
echo $_SESSION['your_session_variable'];

Chrlauncher is a very simple yet very useful tool to quickly download and install Chromium to your PC. It supports both 32-bit and 64-bit Windows systems. Due to the fact that the tool downloads Chromium to your PC, you will not have to run a third-party tool in order to get the latest version of the web browser, chrlauncher can be of great assistance in situations where your web browser's update capability might be jeopardized. Furthermore, after installing the application to your PC, it can be used to launch Chromium, which can be very helpful for those who are more comfortable with the Windows interface. Screenshot:

What's New In?

ChrLauncher is a lightweight, portable application that allows you to update the Chromium browser to its latest version or download it if no version is available on your PC. After updating, it can be easily used as a launcher utility for the same web browser. It contains all necessary executables to perform all necessary functions. There is no need to install it on your computer as it is portable and self-contained. ChrLauncher supports Windows XP, Windows 7, Windows 8 and Windows 10. ChrLauncher does not tamper with your Windows registry entries nor does it create additional files or folders. All the following features are supported by the application: *

- * Detects if the latest version of Chromium is available on your PC.
- * Downloads the latest version of Chromium to your computer.
- * Removes the Chrome launcher and removes the Google Chrome browser shortcut that you can create manually.
- * Cleans your computer to make sure that any security issues are fixed.
