In order to show players how using the motion capture data in the game can affect gameplay, the development team decided to simulate a number of matches using motion capture data from real-life players. The development team then implemented the movement data from these real-life matches into a simulation engine, and played the simulation on-screen using a first-person view. The first-person view is then rendered as a real-time game using the player's motion capture data. "This is how it's done in real life, and that's how it looks in Fifa 22 Product Key," says Producer of FIFA 22, Matt Prior. "In real-life, the player movement data is directly mapped into the simulation engine; with FIFA 22 we've taken the first step towards capturing the same kind of authenticity. With the HyperMotion Technology, we want to take this a step further and really show players how the speed and weight of real-life movement translates into the game engine." This illustration shows the progress of a real-life match being "played" on-screen using motion capture data. How does it work? To start, motion capture data is collected from 22 players—11 forwards and 11 backs—taking part in a 20-minute-long high-intensity football match. An expert in the field then uses the real-life data to create a series of movements and player behaviours, called "4D models." For example, a motion capture expert might have created a 4D model of a player using real-life data showing how that player runs, accelerates, decelerates, lunges and jumps. Based on this real-life data, a team of programmers then take the data and build a movement or "4D model" for a character in the game. Once the character is created, the 4D model is used to make the in-game character move in a natural, intuitive way. However, once the player enters the game, the motion capture data is then mapped into the game engine. This involves simulating the character's movements to an incredibly high degree of detail based on the player's movement data, to show how that player would run or perform in the game. When the simulation is complete, FIFA 22 will allow the player to see how the movement of a real-life player affects gameplay. If a player sprints, for example, the way that player might run in the game will also be

- A new Career mode that gives you more ways to progress, achieve, and immerse yourself in your Pro's journey through the game.
- FIFA 22 introduces a new Dynamic Contract System. Every player now belongs to a team contract and this can change per match. Successive match results will increase or decrease your contract and in turn your contract value. The contract value determines the bonuses and service time of your players. Try turning it in your favor for an extra boost to your second team. With the new Career Mode you will not only learn new things about soccer but about yourself and your players.
- FIFA 22 introduces 'FIFA Experience', which captures your friend's actions on the pitch. This is used to create an AI based on that capture and also to train better transfer behavior for your players.
- Based on data from real-life players, the new Hyper Motion Tech allows for improved player mechanics and AI. Closeness to the ball will be more realistic, there will be more variety in the way players run and tackle, and the ball will react to player input to better move around the pitch.
- FIFA 22 allows players to customize each of their skill assignments in a new in-depth Skill Tree. Skill points are earned by completing actions in game such as effective passes and crosses.
- The idea of making the player characters feel more connected to the game world has become a core notion for this year's project. As a result, not only do the players feel more connected to the game, but all of their body reactions are now more sensitive to the football environment.
- Goalkeepers now have multiple animations to show how they step up to take a shot. This lets the gamer see how he would adjust to a situation when switching his attention and changing the position of his right

After posting my son's first experience with snow, I'm ready for March! I'm ready to start relaxing, preparing for tax time, and getting ready to get the gardeners out for the spring. It's never too early to start, right? Let's talk about what we're planning on doing in March. For those of you who are on Facebook, we've got a link on the sidebar, so make sure you're following us there to be first to see updates. The weather...will be chilly. I don't know about you, but I don't like it when it's cold and I have to bundle up all the time. I'm ready to be able to hang the clothes on the line and not have to deal with putting a hat on all the time. So we're going to plan some time to take advantage of the warmer weather. I know that sounds weird to some, but I've never been one to sit around and watch the weather. I love gardening in the spring. I also love food. So being able to have fresh, homegrown food in March is great. And when I'm done with the garden and the gardeners are done with pruning, I think I'll be ready for this. I've always wanted to take cooking classes and I'm dying to take one in the spring. I want to learn how to cook more economical dishes. I want to learn to make soups and stews. I want to make mole and curry and whatever else. I want to learn how to make gluten-free dishes. I want to learn how to bake and cook with whole grains. A lot of people think that only white people eat
