Images via Disney-LIGHTNING. c-Jun transcriptional function is maintained independently of association with the transcription factor AF9. As a key molecule in the regulation of cell-type-specific gene expression, c-Jun has been shown to be functionally active as a homodimer and as an obligatory partner of a number of nuclear proteins. Here we present evidence for a mechanism for regulation of c-Jun by discrete protein-protein interactions, and show that such interactions do not require association with other proteins known to interact with c-Jun. We demonstrate that the stress-response-inducing drug t-BHP, which serves as a model for both oxidative and electrophilic stress signals, elicits a potent and rapidly-induced hyperphosphorylation of c-Jun. We also show that the loss of functional Jun in Rat-1 cells renders these cells more resistant to the

With Native American Folk Songs for Orchestra.Suicidal ideation among early adolescents: the moderating effects of low school connectedness. The current study investigated whether the characteristics of school life as perceived by adolescents in the community are associated with suicidal ideation. More specifically, we examined the association between connectedness to school and suicidal ideation. Additionally, we examined whether the association between school connectedness and suicidal ideation is influenced by the reason for low school connectedness (e.g., suspension, graduation). A random sample of 203 early adolescents (Mage = 12.49 years; 52% girls) living in Montreal, Canada participated in the study. Participants reported on connectedness to school and suicidal ideation over the last month. The sample was divided into two groups: students with a reason for low connectedness that was related to graduation or suspension/sickness and those with a reason for low connectedness that was not related to graduation or suspension/sickness. Students with a reason for low school connectedness that was related to graduation or suspension/sickness experienced higher levels of suicidal ideation
