In a devastating blow to austerity Britain, construction union UCATT was this week ordered by the High Court to pay more than Â£3.25 million to the Treasury. This follows a High Court decision last year which found that Treasury officials had illegally seized Â£3.7 million from UCATT, an action which the union had pursued since 2013. The result of these legal actions is that more than two thirds of the money owed has now been returned to UCATT. This judgment is a victory not just for UCATT, but for unions as a whole, and a lesson for the government – you cannot keep stealing money from workers and union members and get away with it. The government must pay back the Â£3.3 million, and the Treasury must be compelled to give back the full amount seized. And the government must ensure that this never happens again. Austerity Britain is continuing to steal from workers and unions in this way.

The government is currently pushing through plans to force workers who are based in London but who work in the south east to pay more council tax in the south east and to move their families there. This would mean that far from paying their council tax in London, they would actually be paying their council tax in towns and villages in the south east. The government announced these cuts and other austerity measures in the budget a year ago, when the Chancellor of the Exchequer, George Osborne, said they would save the country at least Â£4 billion. At the time, the government said that it would not be forced to pay back the
