"HyperMotion Technology" offers contextual actions that make on-the-ball control feel more intuitive and responsive. The player's positioning is governed by a physics-based animation system, which regulates movements realistically and makes it possible for the player to realistically maintain space in tight spaces. However, users will still need to lean towards the ball, dodge and counter. "We have designed the new animation system to give players confidence and trust in their skills to make it easier to control and to execute the moves and passes they want," explained David Luyt, FIFA Lead Animator. "We have also created multiple levels of animations so the team can personalize and adjust the animations at any time during a match." With FIFA 21, we reimagined the visual language of FIFA's gameplay. From the depth to the shadows, every detail has been rebuilt to showcase the unmatched intensity and spectacle of the sport. The new animation system is the result of building on FIFA 21's gameplay innovations. "HyperMotion Technology" is the first in-game engine upgrade we have ever done for FIFA's long-time gameplay engine, Frostbite, and based on the feedback from our internal alpha, and external testing, it's resulted in an incredibly close match to actual player motions. Each and every tackle, attack and pass performed by the player during the match is now captured by the animation system and influenced by the physics-based animation system. "The animations affect the way players position themselves relative to the ball," said Luyt. "If a player is too far away from the ball, he will be too far away from opponents and not be able to approach them. And if a player is too close to the ball, he will be too close to the opponent and he will have to run more or be more aggressive to intercept the ball and retrieve possession." The high-definition look of each and every animation is in perfect sync with the visual look of the ball. Furthermore, the animation of the player can also be customized at any time during the match. The ball control system and animations are tightly tied together. "We have made it possible for players to feel the ball directly, and to respond to the ball and use their head and body to control it," explained Luyt. "The physics-based animation
