Flashfreerarindir __FULL__

if a url is specified for the src attribute, a new url will be constructed by stripping the path from the original url, and concatenating a set of properties that can be used to control the behavior of loading of the image, the file type, the imagesize, and other settings. the properties in the defaultprops attribute can be used to set the default set of properties for all images. the onload attribute can be used to specify a method that will be called after the image is loaded. the crossdomain.xml file can be used to control the access to a document, but should not be used with loading images. if necessary, the access attribute should be used instead. for more information, see the cross domain xml configuration document. the flashfreerarindir command allows you to set the --free-range (-r) option in a php ffmpeg call. the --free-range option tells ffmpeg to decode all frames from the file like would be the case if it were a --free-range option. this option is only useful when working with large images and video files, but you still want to preserve the integrity of the original file. the --free-range option takes effect every time the command is executed (as if it were a command-line option). however, for each file, the --free-range option is only valid for ffmpeg options , and for the duration of the file. the --free-range option can only be set for static files. the --free-range option can be set at the command-line when processing a local file, or at the script beginning, to make it apply to all files in the folder. the --free-range option applies to local files, provided that they are filtered using a php filters call, as well as to local files that you download from a remote server. if you want --free-range to work with files that you download from a remote server, you can send them to a local folder first, using a --execute switch.
